Biographical Note

Edward N. Wentworth was born in New Hampshire in 1887 and became a professor in Kansas and Iowa, until he joined a meat packing firm in 1919. He retired to Red Oak Ridge, which is near Porter County in Indiana in 1954 along with his wife where he wrote many books on the history of the American animals until his death in 1959 (SNAC).

"We all prefer to believe that we are part of the stream of life - of the pulse of civilization - as if tonight, for the silent streams and dunes, the muted hills and vales, and the quiet woodsy slopes that we all love as Porter County, ... we may all discover something which will permit us to thread ourselves and our surroundings into the pattern of American history" (Wentworth, 3).
